IPC Snapshot report May 2025: Response

1. Even according to the IPC's own analysis, there is no famine in Gaza. The phrase "facing famine" is misleading, as it refers to future scenarios projected by the IPC that have repeatedly failed to materialize since the start of the war and are based on assumptions that have been proven inaccurate and alarmist time and again.

2. The IPC once again publishes alarming findings without releasing the underlying data or analysis. This lack of transparency has been a persistent feature the IPC's reporting on Gaza, in contravention of its declared principles and official guidelines.

3. The IPC's projections have consistently failed to predict the reality on the ground, consistently projecting scenarios that are far worse than what actually happened.

4. The IPC's methodology and approach to analyzing food security data in Gaza contain serious flaws. Israel published detailed analyses of those failure which the IPC has never responded to.

5. The IPC also fails to account for the massive volume of aid that entered during the time of the hostage release deal, 25,200 trucks carrying mostly food– a critical omission.

6. Importantly, IPC does not collect data independently; they rely heavily on UN sources, which during the ceasefire period reflected only about a third of the actual humanitarian aid that entered Gaza.
